A Very Cold Morning Indeed.—We were up early this morning. In fact, we were frozen up. Ice on windows was thick; blankets on bed wasn't. Spoke to our landlord about it. He said it toos a cold night. Went into the street and saw a library criting our nills with an ave. milk-man cutting out milk with an axe and selling it by dry measure. The best whisky in — was frozen. An insurance agent, who was looking for a fire, gave us that item; met an old gentleman on the street; he had his head bound up in a red street; he had his head bound up in a red blanket and his hands in his pantaloons pockets. Yellow dog running up street fouled with old gentleman's legs. Old gentleman sat down on the back of his head and kicked at dog. He said some-thing about a mad dog. He was a Ger-man and said it backwards. Next, saw little girl crossing street with pail of water. Water caught a chill, froze and burst the pail in less than two minutes. the pail in less than two minutes. Little girl sat down on fragments to cry and was instantly frozen fast to a chunk of ice. She jumped up and ran, when she saw us coming, taking ice with her. Chunk of ice looked, in distance, like a diamond in crown of king. Old lady, on Water street, wanted a little boy to chop wood. Little boy ran up the walk, rounded to at an iron post, and stuck his tongue out at old lady. Endeavored to swallow post when he pulled tongue back, but it wouldn't come up. Old lady came out with dipper of hot water and old slipper. Poured water on top of post with one hand and flourished slipper to rear of boy with the other. Steam of hot he pail in less than two minutes with one hand and nourisses supper to rear of boy with the other. Steam of hot water froze instantly, fastened dipper to post and old lady's hand to dipper. There she stood, like a statue of correction, with the dipper in one hand and slipper raised from one of our exchanges: "Some months ago a young lady in Bridgeport, Ohlo, lost some valuable jewelry. A month or so since she re-ceived a letter stating that it would be returned in as mysterious a manner as it had disappeared. One morning this week, when the family arose they observed that the blinds to one of the windows in a room where plants are kept were closed, and, as they are rarely shut the circumstance. stance was all the more noticeable. The father opened the blinds, and while in the act of doing so discovered a small package which had been securely fastened to them by some one during the night. He them by some one unrung the inglet. He removed the package, and upon opening it, after going to another room, it was found to contain the identical watch and jewelry. The mystery concerning the taking of the property, its return and by whom it was done, is still as profound as ever."
